

Community Disaster Resilience Zones aim to build and strengthen community resilience across the nation by driving federal, public, and private resources to the most at-risk and in-need communities.

The Community Disaster Resilience Zones Act uses FEMA’s National Risk Index to identify the most at-risk and in-need communities to identify resilience zones. Designated zones will be prioritized for targeted federal support, such as increased cost-share for resilience and mitigation projects, lessening the financial burden on communities to perform resilience-related activities.

September 6, FEMA announced the initial 483 designations in all 50 states and the District of Columbia. A second designation for tribal lands and territories will be in Fall 2023.

What’s Next?

FEMA has indicated that these communities may be eligible for a 90% federal and 10% non-federal cost share under the Building Resilient Infrastructure and Communities (BRIC) program in the future.

By FEMA identifying these census tracts as CDRZ, it is possible that these communities will have increased access to federal or private funds in the future. At this time, it is still unclear exactly what being a CDRZ means for a community; however, our branch believes it is important to communicate these designations to the communities that have been identified.
